

Meet Our Speaker: Susan Adger

My family came to the Tampa Bay area in the late 1800's and has been here for five generations. I borrowed from my memories of our old cracker family stories while working on Seashells, Gator Bones, and the Church of Everlasting Liability. The book was a pleasure to write; most of the characters just sort of magically appeared on the page.

For me, there's nothing more interesting than family relationships. For over thirty-five years, our extended family has gathered every single July 4th and Thanksgiving to catch up. I've always thought it fascinating that we are so very different from each other – if I weren't related to most of them I probably wouldn't even know them. But I love them dearly.

I currently reside in Dunedin, Florida and am active with several writing groups. I'm delighted that all three of my children now live in the area.
